In my mind, the core of success with scientific or medically oriented journals is the peer-review process. Irene Hames,\textsuperscript{1} author of \textit{Peer Review and Manuscript Management in Scientific Journals}, wrote that “scholarly publication is the means by which new work is communicated, and peer review is a vitally important part of the publication process” (p. 1).

As \textit{Athletic Training & Sports Health Care} grows in circulation and the number of manuscript submissions, we will continue to burden our peer reviewers to uphold the quality and consistency of important and timely sports health care information that our readership demands and deserves.

So, as \textit{Athletic Training & Sports Health Care} enters its second year, I would be remiss if I didn’t offer my sincerest thanks to those at the center of that peer-review process: our editorial board members and manuscript reviewers.

Thank you all for your efforts in helping to make our first year as a journal successful. Your continued support is welcomed.
